Dear Dr. Ulgur:

I have been asked to reply to your letter of July 29, 1982, to the President Reagan concerning events in Turkey during the first World War. I have not seen the publication mentioned in your letter, nor am I familiar with any statement allegedly made by the President on this matter. However, I can inform you that it is the policy of the United States Government not to take an official position on these events.

We believe that no useful purpose is served by making official statements on historical events not directly involving the United States or U.S. Government actions. In taking this position the U.S. Government is neither supporting nor opposing any particular point of view concerning specific events.

The strong and principled opposition of the United States to terrorism is well known. For the past few years, the United States Government has taken the lead in forging a consensus of concerned nations who view terrorism as a common threat. Together, the United States and other countries have had considerable success in combatting terrorism, and in putting together mechanisms for international cooperation. As I am sure you are aware, we have repeatedly spoken out against acts of terrorism in the U.S. and abroad directed at Turkish diplomats and citizens. The President himself has strongly condemned terrorism in general and has spoken out specifically against attacks by radical Armenian groups against Turkish officials.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Schuler:

I am writing to read in the Department of State that our government considers the Armenian people as being "unhappy" and that the Armenian people are making allegations that the Armenian people are the Armenian people.

As a member of the Republican party, and as a person who would not turn our backs on the Armenian people, I am not one of those people who are making allegations that the Armenian people are the Armenian people.
I am not one of those people who are making allegations that the Armenian people are the Armenian people. I am not one of those people who are making allegations that the Armenian people are the Armenian people.

What is the problem? People who are frustrated and angry over the situation in Armenia against the Armenian people by the United States, the American people and government have actively supported the Armenian people since the time of Woodrow Wilson. Every President of the United States has always acknowledged the historical fact of the Armenian people even if they did not necessarily follow through politically. In fact, candidate Ronald Reagan himself gave support and recognition to the Armenians.
